"brilliant...damn funny" - boingboing.net"

"Best of the Bay" - Oakland Tribune

"comedienne extraordinaire" -Austin Chronicle

Driven to comedy by law school, nationally-touring comedian Heather Gold continues to mix mind with matter, never doing the same set twice. She's garnering praise from critics and audiences for her witty standup, interactive style and solo shows. Her debut "I Look Like An Egg, but I Identify As A Cookie" was named Best of The Bay by the Oakland Tribune and she Curve Magazine's National Theatre Award the last two years for "Cookie" and the C Word with Jen Kober.

Heather's unique style is a reflection of her unorthodox artistic path, reflecting her studies at Yale, Northwestern Law, The Groundlings and and years working in Hollywood and the geek culture of Silicon Valley. Heather now practices a new kind of comedy based on intelligence, authenticity and the unique ability to make connections between the most unlikely things: from politics, technology and family to sex and the US Constitution. Genuine and warmhearted, Heather never makes fun of her audience but brings out their best as she involves them in an unique experience that leaves them laughing and thinking.

Heather contributes to many publications, including NPR's Circuits pilot, TechTV, the Toronto Globe and Mail, the San Jose Mercury News and her own popular subvert.com. Heather's played countless venues, sharing the stage with folks like Patton Oswalt, Elvira Kurt, and Jill Soloway.

Heather brings her intelligent and "remarkable improvisational skills" (SFWeekly) to venues, colleges, conferences and companies across the continent. She's hosted Austin Gay Pride, written for Alan Cumming, shared the stage with Tony-winner Bill Irwin and and has baked over 20,000 chocolate chip cookies with audiences in "Cookie." which ran for over a year in San Francisco and recently played Ars Nova in NY, presenter of comics like Sarah Silverman, Judy Gold and Sandra Bernhard.
